THE MEANING AND ORIGIN OF HERALDRY

Shakesbear

When you realize that nearly 85 percent of all Americans can trace their heritage back to one of the British Commonwealth nations of England, Scotland, Ireland or Wales, you can imagine just how many people living in America are likely to have an authentic coat of arms somewhere in their background. There are many coats of arms circulating that are the product of recent artistic innovation; and if you'd like to have one of these on the wall of your den, there are several legitimate houses that specialize in their creation.

But you probably aren't interested in recent developments, but rather are trying to discover if any of your ancestors had the rank or position in the old country that would have entitled them to own and use an official coat of arms.

Heraldry, at one time, was very serious business. The reason for having a coat of arms was so one could be identified in battle. Not only was one's shield adorned with his chosen identification, but also was one's helmet--just in case the shield wasn't visible.

Sir Thomas Malory, who lived from 1408 to 1471--the time when knighthood and heraldry were probably at their peak--wrote what is considered the finest collection of Arthurian romances, "Le Morte D'Artur", the death of King Arthur. The feeling and intensity for knighthood during the 15th century is quite evident in the paragraph on the death of Lancelot--"Thou Sir Lancelot, there thou liest, that thou were never matched of earthly knight's hand. And thou were the courtest knight that ever bare shield. And thou were the truest friend to thy lover that ever bestrad horse. And thou were the truest lover of a sinful man that ever loved woman. And thou were the kindest man that ever struck with sword. And thou were the goodliest person that ever came among press of knights. And thou were the meekest man and gentlest that ever ate in the hall among ladies. And thou were the sternest knight to thy mortal foe that ever put spear in the rest."

You can see that knights and all that went with them were highly regarded. In most cases, coats of arms were issued to individuals (such as Lancelot) rather than to families. And under strict heraldic tradition, only the first son of the first son is entitled to bear his ancestor's coat of arms. If there were more than one son in the family, the rules of heraldry said it was all right for them to use the coat of arms, but it had to be changed in some way. If the family's line was to be carried on by daughters, she was allowed to combine her family's coat of arms with that of her husband's. That's a bit of a warning to those of you who begin to trace a coat of arms. Obviously there are going to be combinations along the way that will make it necessary for you to carefully dissect each coat of arms in order to identify the changes and additions that occurred over the years.

Incidentally the name "coat of arms" comes from the practice of the knight wearing a cloth coat over his armor--a coat on which his identifying arms were sewn. The knight, therefore, literally wore a coat of arms.

When the custom of having a coat of arms really became popular, every knight wanted to make his own, unique insignia. Obviously there was some duplication, and most cases the duplication wasn't settled without some kind of fight. In fact, the fighting over coats of arms became so intense that in 1419, Henry V of England issued a decree that there would be no more coats of arms unless one's ancestor had one, or unless it was received as a gift from the Crown. Later in the century, Richard III, just to reinforce the decree, sent inspectors into the various parts of the kingdom to authenticate coats of arms already in use and deny their use to anyone who was trying to circumvent the king's order.

These inspectors, known as heralds, have full jurisdiction over disputes over who is or who is not entitled to use a particular coat of arms. The heralds are still very much in existence today and preside over the heraldic lineage at The College of Arms, Queen Victoria Street, London E.C.4V4BT. No outsiders are allowed access to their records so mail contact is the only way to have your research done.

There are three rules for granting a coat of arms.

1. Document that you are a direct descendant of an arms-bearing ancestor in an unbroken line of first sons. In this situation you can have your ancestor's coat of arms assigned to you.
2. Prove your descent as any of the other sons of an arms-bearing ancestor and you can have an altered (different) coat of arms assigned.
3. If you are of English or Welsh descent, you can buy a brand new coat of arms.

Actually, if you want to be 100% correct historically, you should not refer to the identifying adornment that has been discussing as a "coat of arms." It should be referred to as an "Achievement of Arms." Common usage has eroded the original name but remember that the coat of arms was only what was described earlier--a coat worn over the armor on which was painted the Achievement of Arms.

There are eight recognized parts to each Achievement-of-Arms. A helmet, crest, wreath, mantle, shield, supporters, compartment and motto. A description of an Achievement-of-Arms is called a blazon. Official descriptions are usually only one sentence long.

1. The Helmet--The portion of the armor used to protect the head and eventually the face. The helmet shown on the shield indicated the rank of the user.

2. The Crest--The figure or symbol attached to the top of the helmet to help identify the wearer. Its design was usually taken from the shield and it's always used with the Achievement-of-Arms--never by itself.

3. The Wreath--Also known as a torse, this twisted cloth or piece of silk was put at the base of the crest to conceal the joint of the crest and the helmet. The standard wreath has six twists that alternate the color and metal of the shield.

Helmet (1), and mantle (2), joined by wreath (3).

Shield, Helmet, and Crest

Basic Shield

4. The Mantle--Also known as a lambrequin, the mantle was actually a piece of fabric attached to the helmet to protect the wearer from the heat of the sun. There are two basic types of mantles--a whole mantle or a seaweed (much-divided) mantle which was supposed to indicate the wearer had been involved in a struggle involving hand-to-hand combat.

5. The Shield--This is undoubtedly the most important component in any Achievement-of-Arms.

Throughout the years, the shape of the shield has changed--somewhat like our fashions do today. While the shape of the shield isn't important in reading its meaning, it may be an indication of the time period when the shield was in use.

6. The Supporters--These are the figures on either side of the shield--people or animals--holding up the shield. In Scotland, the supporters were called bearers.

7. The Compartment--This is the base or "ground" on which the supporters stand. The origin is believed to have been Scottish and possibly represented the territories held by the owner of the Achievement-of-Arms.

8. The Motto--This saying, hope or creed is almost always shown in Latin. The "ribbon" on which the words appear might be at the bottom on the Compartment or, in some cases, at the top of the Arms. The motto is not considered an essential part of the display.

There are five important points on a shield, and these points are usually called out as though you were holding the shield in front of you for protection: The dexter is the right side; the sinister is the left side; the chief is the top; the base is the bottom; and the fess point is in the center. Of course, if you're facing a shield all the point locations are reversed.

The tinctures are the "metals", "colors" or "furs" used on the field. There are two metals, gold (or) shown in yellow and silver (argent) shown in white.

Five colors are used--red, (gules), blue (azure), green (vert), purple (purpure) and black (sable).

And there are two fur patterns--an ermine pattern in black and white (this is sometimes shown as gold and black); and a vair pattern which alternates blue and white (and occasionally blue and silver). As an interesting sidelight, the vair was a type of squirrel, blue/grey on top with a white underside, whose fur was very popular as a lining for cloaks.

FUR

COLOURS

Incidentally, if you should come across a reddish-purple color (murray or sanguine) or an orange-tawny color (henna) your investigation is likely to get even more interesting and perhaps a bit disturbing. These two colors were rarely used because they signified an abatement of honor and were a mark of disgrace.

When it comes to painting the shield, the standard rule is that metal is always displayed on color, or color is displayed on metal. You'll never find metal on metal, or color on color simply because these combinations didn't provide enough definition for rapid identification on the battlefield.

Also on the shield's field, you'll find designs, known as charges. These designs might be anything, but the most popular subjects are lions, roses and lilies.

The geometric figures used as designs on the shield fall into two categories--Honorable Ordinares and Sub-Ordinares. There are seven Honorable Ordinares: the bend, the chevron, the chief, the cross, the fess, the pale and the saltire.

There are fourteen Sub-Ordinares: the annulet, the billet, the bordure, the canton, the flaunc, the fret, the gyron, the inescutcheon, the label, the lozenge, the orle, the pile, the roundel, and the tressure. (If your search takes you this far, consult any good heraldic reference book for examples.)

The Partition Lines are used to divide the shield and to border both the Honorable Ordinares and the Sub-Ordinares. There are eight basic styles: indented, invected, engrailed, wavy, nebuly, embattled, ruguly and dovetailed. (See examples on next page.)

These eight parts of an Achievement-of-Arms are the basic ingredients; however, there are several other additions which may or may not appear, depending both on how the Arms were obtained and the social position of the bearer.

The Insignia of Office--Most likely a baton or wand indicating high office, displayed from behind the shield.

The Insignia of an Order of Knighthood--Any grade of an order of knighthood was allowed to display an insignia with his Achievement-of-Arms. It could be anything from a circle around the outer edge of the shield to a badge suspended below it.

The Coronet--A crown that denotes a peer (such as a duke, marquis, earl, viscount, etc.) of the kingdom. The coronet, when the bearer is entitled to display one, rests above the shield and supports the helmet.

The Robe of Estate--Another way to denote a peer of the kingdom, and it was often used as a background to the Arms. It usually appears scarlet with a taffeta lining, and the degree of rank is indicated by the number of "guards" or bands of fur.

Only the basics of English and Scottish heraldry have been discussed here. Heraldry itself is a vast subject and mastering all the subtleties of this colorful practice involves years of study and research. In fact, all the present European countries have heraldic tradition--some more deeply entrenched than others.

Although the thing people call a "coat of arms" is such a desirable badge of royal lineage, don't lay claim to an Achievement of Arms until you're certain it belongs to your family. Like everything else in genealogy, the right to display a coat of arms is provable, and just because your ancestors had the same surname as a family with heraldic trappings, that doesn't give you the legal right to adopt the insignia. The New England Historic Genealogical Society has, for a number of years, been publishing a list of those American families entitled to a coat of arms. It might pay you to check this source to see if any sides of your family are mentioned.

ORGANIZING YOUR RESEARCH
by Patricia E. Reid

Whenever I begin a totally new project I usually have no idea how to get started or how to organize my materials. I usually just start plodding along as best as I can. After the project has been underway for a while, I begin to understand what I'm doing, how it is to be done and what tools and equipment are best fitted to the task. Sometimes that means starting again from scratch; other times it may merely entail changing a few procedures.

This was more true of family research than anything else I have ever done. I would spend days looking for information I knew I had on Edward Sweeney before finally locating him listed as Mary Gatewood's husband. I soon realized order must come from the chaos I had created.

I first made two important determinations:

1. To always have a separate sheet for every different surname I encountered. I may only have one item of information; such as Mary Smith, daughter of Hezekiah Smith, married 1820 Joseph Cole. Making a sheet for Joseph Cole and filing it alphabetically ensured me that I would quickly be able to locate good old Joseph when five years down the road Cousin Susie supplied me with a list of his children.
2. To list children only under their father's name. As in the example above, in the Smith data, after stating that Mary Smith married Joseph Cole, in parentheses one could say: (see Cole for children.) Everyone thought an aunt of mine had voluminous family records, which came into my possession after her death. After eliminating duplicates that she evidently made every time she got a new typewriter ribbon and listing children only under their father's name, I ended up with only eight typewritten pages.

This helped me considerably, but something else was of even more help. Somewhere along the way I acquired some pages that had been razor-bladed out of a periodical. There is no indication on them of the name of the author, the name of the publication or date it was published. They contained some valuable gems of information that I want to share with you that might also make your researching more organized and efficient.

The author advocates the use of several forms: The Family Group Sheet, The Individual Heritage Chart and The Correspondence Record Keeping Chart. They will be explained briefly on the following pages and examples you may copy for your own use are also included.

THE FAMILY GROUP SHEET is your primary working document. There are many different layouts for this form. Because of space restrictions, only two are included here. The information it contains is the background picture you want to develop about each one of your relatives and ancestors. You will carry your Family Group Sheets with you whenever you visit a relative; you will have some by the telephone whenever you talk to a relative; you will copy and send them to distant relatives so they may know exactly what information you do and don't have.

* Fill out the Family Group Sheets originally in pencil since there'll be many changes made. When your research indicates the information you've written on these sheets is accurate, then you may want to transcribe it in ink or by typewriter. When you take that step, enclose it in a plastic sheet protector to protect it from constant handling.

The Family Group Sheet itself is almost self explanatory. Simply begin at the top, filling in the information as you progress. Needless to say, the further back in time you go, the harder it will be to get complete information. That's the point at which genealogical research becomes most interesting and it's also the point at which you'll be very glad you spent time carefully gathering as much information on these Family Group Sheets as you did.

You'll find yourself using a great many Family Group Sheets as your search progresses:

- a. Begin, of course, with yourself.
- b. Prepare a FGS for each of your siblings.
- c. Then, a FGS for your father.
- d. A FGS for each of his siblings.
- e. A FGS for your mother.
- f. A FGS for her siblings.
- g. A FGS for your father's father.
- h. A FGS for his siblings.
- i. A FGS for your father's mother.
- j. A FGS for her siblings.
- k. A FGS for your mother's father.
- l. A FGS for his siblings.
- m. A FGS for your mother's mother.
- n. A FGS for her siblings.
- o. Etc.--just keep going as far as you can!

You might find the following pointers helpful when filling out your sheets.

- a. Record the Individual Heritage Chart line numbers for the husband and wife who appear on the sheet. While this simple record keeping may not appear to be important in the early stages of your search, as you uncover five and six generations, it's quite possible you could be working with close to a thousand names--then this careful cross referencing becomes the only difference between a well organized effort and total confusion.
- b. Always record the complete, full name. No initials or abbreviations should be used.
- c. Show the maiden name of every woman on your chart.

- d. Always record the date in the same sequence--day, month and year [11 Jun 1923 rather than 6/11/23]. Use three letter abbreviations for months, Sep not Sept and always write the complete year, 1923 not '23.
- e. Additionally, places need to be recorded in a constant way--town, county and state is the preferred sequence--as Bowling Green, Warren Co, KY.
- f. Eventually you'll find it helpful if you designate whether family members are male or female--some names make sex determination difficult, so an f or m in a circle will help clarify the situation for future generations.
- g. Keep in mind that in a vicarious way, you're playing detective, so that any information at all that you uncover is probably important enough to record.
- h. Such things as titles or occupations should not be overlooked; neither should be fact that a wife or husband was married more than once, or that a child was one of twins or triplets.

THE INDIVIDUAL HERITAGE CHART is the second "tool" in your genealogical research kit. You may hear it referred to as a pedigree chart, but that sounds as though you are tracing the blood line of your puppy.

With an Individual Heritage Chart you can quickly and simply plot out family relationships for four generations. Then, because each chart entry is number keyed, you can continue to go back in time and maintain an easily traceable trail of just precisely where each one of these relationships leads.

As with the Family Group Sheet you again begin with yourself--as you begin to write down names, always use the complete name if you know it. Remember, you're trying to get all the information that's available--full names, without the use of initials or abbreviations, are a must.

On line #2, enter your father's name; and on line #3, your mother's name. On lines #4 and #5 will be the names of your parental grandfather and grandmother. Lines #6 and #7 will contain the names of your maternal grandfather and grandmother.

After you've recorded your great, great-grandparents, in order to continue your family's heritage you'll have to begin new Individual Heritage Charts--sixteen of them.

You can see that you double a person's number to obtain his or her father's number and add one number to the father's number to obtain the mother's.

If you've begun with chart #1 and taken your own family back to the 4th generation, then line #16 is transferred as the first person on Chart #2; line #17 on Chart #1 becomes the first person on Chart #3, line #18 on Chart #1 becomes the first person on Chart #4, line #19 on Chart #1 becomes the first person on Chart #5, etc.

Even though you may be missing the name of one of your great-grandparents, assign a chart number to him or her to keep your numerical sequence correct. Then, on that great day that you discover that person's name and further lineage, you will have a reserved place to record it.

Remember this chart is only an outline showing relationships and just where each person roosts on your family tree. Don't try to record too much information on it. The place for all the extra tidbits of knowledge is your PERSONAL HISTORY SHEET.

BEGINNING YOUR RESEARCH. The nice thing about beginning genealogical research is that the start-up costs are truly minimal. Two loose leaf binders will do very nicely--the same kind you used to carry to school. It would be advisable to invest in quality binders because you'll probably be using these more than you ever used the ones in school. A few good pencils and a quality eraser, as well as the filler sheets for your notebooks, just about rounds out your list of purchases.

There is one other item you might want to consider using--a tape recorder. When you begin to fill out Family Group Sheets on your living relatives, the questions and answers are most likely to generate a lot of memories. While some of the conversation will ramble a bit, most of it will be about places and events that occurred many years ago, and those casual reminiscences are an important part of your heritage. Now you can write them down, no question about it, but it just seems as though having the information of file, spoken by the person who experienced it, might one day be a very valuable possession for some member of your family in a later generation.

You'll need lots of Family Group Sheets and Individual Heritage Charts.

Fortunately you don't have to go very far to get your family research started. The first person on IHC number 1 is YOU--and that's exactly where the first information will come from. Fill out a FGS for you and your spouse, then depending of which side of the family you're going to trace, put that name on line #1 of an IHC and begin working backwards in time. Until you actually begin to write down what you know, there's no telling just how much really good information you have tucked away in your head.

You'll be asking yourself such questions as:

Where are the birth certificates for me and my spouse?

How about the birth certificates for my children?

Then there's the documentation for your parents and grandparents, aunts and uncles.

This is as good a time as any to begin developing good documentation habits--any official records you can copy that substantiate the information you've recorded about any of your family members should become part of your file. You might want to start a file for each couple on your Individual Chart. Naturally the entries closest to you will (or should) have the biggest files; however, you'll be amazed at the amount of relevant information you'll begin to acquire once word gets out just what you're doing.

When you've gotten all the information from yourself that you can think of, the next step is to begin interviewing your relatives. As you might well imagine, some will cooperate and others will not. When you approach other family members with specific questions, you may be surprised at the number of things you never heard before.

Always ask everyone you interview either in person or by mail if they have any old records you might be able to see. Many family members have Bibles, pictures and papers dating back many years.

One of the primary keys to managing your genealogical search is trying to read and study as much historical information as you can find. Being on intimate terms with the customs, culture, mores, conventions and etiquette of each historical period through which you travel will make your journey that much easier.

The necessity of proving everything you learn cannot be overemphasized. The time you invest in proving each entry conclusively will pay off handsomely in the long run. Every professional genealogist has a raft of horror stories about people who spent weeks, months and even years building an ancestral record on an unproven entry only to find eventually they were not working within their true family.

The only thing most people start out with when beginning family research is enthusiasm. After you understand a little about genealogy you will discover that nearly all the information you need on your various family lines is on record someplace. You just need to learn how to go about extracting that information.

One of the ways to substantiate your findings is with official records--birth, marriage and death certificates are mandatory evidence. The practice of relying on someone's memories is always risky. However, you shouldn't accept information without question just because it appears on an official document--clerical errors occurred several hundred years ago just like they occur today.

You need to get familiar with the Research Department of your local library, the people who are keepers of official documentation at your local court house and your local historical society. Approach all these people with the right attitude and win their friendship and you'll be amazed how much they know about genealogical research and how well they can direct you to official sources. Most of these people have been asked the same questions you're about to ask many times and over the years they've accumulated a wealth of background knowledge about useful techniques for finding elusive information.

When you find you need information from out of town sources, it may not always be convenient to go dashing off to make personal visits. The mail is still your most economical means of data retrieval. Libraries and historical societies often have people who answer letters with genealogical questions provided you follow some practical steps:

- a. Always enclose a stamped, self addressed envelope for the reply.
- b. Offer to pay for any photocopies you reply might require or even enclose one or two dollars in your initial request.
- c. Restrict your request to one or two items of specific information.
- d. Remember the person who reads your letter has not done the extensive research you've done and therefore isn't knowledgeable about your particular family heritage, so you'll need to provide simple, to-the-point background information.

CORRESPONDENCE RECORD KEEPING CHART. When you get to the point of needing to do a great deal of correspondence about information you must have from distant locations, you'll begin to lost sight of all the letters you've written if you don't keep some kind of record.

If you set up a simple Correspondence Record Keeping Chart, you can tell at a glance to whom you've written, when, what you asked them to do, how much money you sent for copying, when you received a reply, what the reply said and where you placed the information on your Family Group Charts or your Forward Lineage Charts.

When writing letters keep the following points in mind:

1. Typed letters are always best, but if that isn't possible, take your time and be certain everything you write is legible.
2. Make a copy of every letter you write.
3. Keep your letter simple. Don't feel you have to relate your entire family history to make a point or ask a question.
4. Don't expect people to fund your research. Whenever you ask for any information that will require copies being made, always include money to pay for them.
5. Include a self addressed stamped envelope. Not only does a SASE relieve the person who's helping you of the cost of an envelope and postage, but a SASE will usually encourage your correspondent to give you an answer. The only time return postage isn't necessary is when you're writing to a state or federal agency.
6. And finally, say "thank you."

Computers and their genealogical software have not been mentioned here. Those who have them are indeed fortunate, but those who don't also need some manageable form of record keeping. This has not in any way been intended as a comprehensive coverage of the proper steps of genealogical research. It is only some advice for either beginning researchers or those whose papers are so unorganized that nothing can easily be found.

WRITING YOUR FAMILY HISTORY

After you've compiled as much data as possible on your family's ancestry, what are you going to do with the information? I've heard of one woman who stuffed in all in a grocery sack and stored it under her bed. Some people go to the time and expense of copying all their ancestor charts and family history sheets and distributing them to family members, whether they want them or not. And then there are the intrepid few who decide to write and publish a family history.

POINTERS FOR PUBLISHING:

1. Pick only one branch of your family and concentrate on it. It is virtually impossible to write about your entire family in one book or publication. Any attempt to do so will only confuse the reader and you.
2. Work from an early ancestor (usually the one immigrating to America) down to the present, listing all his known descendants. This is the opposite direction from your research, which worked from the present (yourself) backwards.
3. Try to amass as much information as possible. When contacting other family members, especially ones you haven't met, it is a good idea to write a brief cover letter explaining your project, how that person can help and the time frame in which you need a reply. Then include a family group sheet with all the information you already know on it, indicating what pieces you need. Including a stamped return envelope also increases your chances of success.
4. Don't be surprised if you don't get answers to all your requests. Be sure, though, to keep a record of all the letters you sent. When you do finally publish, cousins will be crawling out of the woodwork complaining that their branch of the family was not included. You can then point out the proper scapegoat on which to load the blame.
5. Don't wait until you have all the information you think you can gather before writing your history. Many researchers have died with that unfinished manuscript mouldering in one of their desk drawers. Publish what you do have and you will probably hear from others you did not even know existed and also those dilatory ones who didn't answer your first request and have enough for a second edition.

FORM FOR PUBLISHING: If your history is very extensive including many persons, write only a brief biography on as many members as possible. Include all the pertinent data plus any other interesting facts known. Do not reprint or quote verbatim every document you have acquired. For instance, you might say, "His will, recorded in the Warren County Courthouse, names his wife and all his children." You have let your reader know you have proper documentation for your facts without subjecting him to a lot of tedious reading.

There are two main methods of arranging your information. I'm not sure if either of them has a name, so I'll refer to the first as Ancestral Listing and the second as Numerical Generational Listing.

ANCESTRAL LISTING You begin with the immigrant, tell what is known about him and list his children. Then each child is taken in order and all that person's descendants are listed before going on to the next one. Usually at the beginning of each new person's information, that person's line is given in parentheses. John Smith (William, John, Albert) would indicate that this John Smith was the son of William, grandson of John and great-grandson of Albert, the Immigrant.

This method has some drawbacks to me. Even though a person's line of descent is given, you still have to hunt a lot of the time before you can locate other information you might desire, either on a particular person's ancestor or descendant.

- When there is a lot known about some of the children, but little about some of the others, the ones with little known tend to get lost among the others.

- The information is usually indexed by page numbers and might take some time to locate on some of the pages.

NUMERICAL GENERATIONAL LISTING You basically begin with the immigrant as the first generation and number 1. Then all the members of the second generation (children of the immigrant) are listed. Numbers are put in parentheses only after the names of the ones about whom you have further information. Insert the subtitle Second Generation. Now start with person who had Number 2 in parentheses after his name, give all information known about him, list his children assigning arabic numerals only to those about whom you have more information. In like manner, continue with Number 3, etc.

When all the children of the second generation have been listed, insert the subtitle Third Generation and proceed with the grandchildren of the immigrant, beginning with the children of (2) and working forward.

- In your Table of Contents and your Index, ignore page numbers and use paragraph numbers. List your Table of Contents by generation and your Index alphabetically.

- A brief example of this may be seen in the article on the Underwood family included on page 155.

Advantage: You may look at any person anywhere in the publication and instantly learn several things about that person: who his parents are and where they are located; who his children are; whether there is any further information on his children; and, if so, where it is to be found.

Disadvantage: This is a static form of numbering and you should have all your information compiled before you begin numbering. It is very time consuming to try to add more information at a later date unless you made allowances and left some numbers free at the end of each generation.

LONGHUNTER ANCESTOR INDEX

VOLUME II

INTRODUCTION

Volume II of the LONGHUNTER ANCESTOR INDEX contains:

1. A listing of 4198 direct ancestors in alphabetical order of members of the SOUTHERN KENTUCKY GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY, Bowling Green, Warren County, Kentucky who did not get their ancestors in the first volume of the Longhunter Ancestor Index which we published in 1990 plus ancestors of 84 members who have joined the SKGS since the first volume was published. Information given in this listing includes: Birth (year, state, county); Death (year, state, county); Marriage (year, state, county); Name of Spouse; and Supplier Code Number for the member who supplied the information.
2. A Spouse cross reference list which contains 4198 Spouses in alphabetical order along with husband/wife names and the Supplier Code Number of the member who submitted the information.
3. A list of those members whose ancestors appear in this book along with their Code Numbers and their current mailing addresses.
4. A List of all of the abbreviations used in this book. We have, in so far as possible, used standard abbreviations, but where none were available, have used abbreviations which to us seem logical.
5. Materials in the book have been contributed by members of the SOUTHERN KENTUCKY GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY. If two members have the same ancestors you will find them listed twice, once with each members Code Number. You may find some discrepancies. For example: Two members who have the same ancestor may list them with different spouses. You may also find places where dates of births, marriages, or deaths are listed for states and counties before they were formed. If you find one of these discrepancies, you may want to contact the member who supplied the data and resolve it.

It is our hope that the information contained in this book may stimulate an exchange of genealogical data among all of our members and provide needed information for all people who have families whose lines appear here.
